DR. NOYES REPLIES TO MEDICAL SOCIETY

Old Issue Revived by Protest Against M. U. Men's Practicing.

ARE ON PART TIME

University Dean Says Attack Is Directed at Student Health Service.

Dr. Guy L. Noyes, dean of the School of Medicine, talking with a reporter for the Missouriian this morning, took issue with the resolution passed Monday night by the Boone County Medical Society, by a vote of eleven to eight, protesting against the fact that University physicians engage in outside practice.

Doctor Noyes said that it was an old, old quarrel that certain doctors were trying to drag before the people again.

"The University Law School," Doctor Noyes said, "has among its teachers men who are only on part time. These men practice downtown and there is no squabble. The conditions are the same in the medical faculty. They are here to teach, but they are not on full pay, and are allowed to take their salaries by private practice.

"The University doctors come here to be a part of the University; the other town doctors do not. The University was here before they came. Columbia is a good town to live and practice in; that is why they are here. The University employs and their families are here. Every physician has an equal opportunity for practice, except only among the students. If the University doctors interfere with the others getting this student practice, that is merely one of the incidents of their location here, which they should have considered when they came. The University is here for the young men and women of the whole state of Missouri, and their welfare is paramount.

University Policy Involved.

"The members of the Boone County Medical Society who voted for the resolution of protest, apparently do not realize that the really live issue is one of University policy, involving the employment of teachers of medicine on a full-time or a part-time basis. This is a matter for the curators to decide. It is most decidedly a matter of public concern, and not, as a physician was quoted yesterday as saying, a mere quarrel among doctors.

"The work of the University health service must be considered. Missouri was the third school in the United States to establish such a service, the universities of Wisconsin and California having preceded us. The University Hospital maintains what is called a group service. Each of the three doctors has a special line of work. It is a good thing for the student to be able to go to one place and get treatment for the various phases of an ailment, at a nominal cost.

Says Parents Appreciate Service.

"The parents of the students realize the benefits of this service to their children."

Viewing the action of the Medical Society as a direct attack upon this student health service, Doctor Noyes concluded:

"I consider the health service a good, economic and healthful enterprise. I helped inaugurate it, and I am strongly for it."
